Make a difference to health outcomes

In 2010 the United Nations recognised access to sanitation and hygiene as a basic human right. However, billions of people around the world do not have access to these basic services. This impacts on the health and wellbeing of communities as disease spreads, work productivity decreases and children's growth and development is stunted.

HAT is doing it's part to reduce this burden by building a sanitation and hygiene centre in Mampando, a village in rural Tanzania.

This will provide the community with the resources and know-how to construct safe toilets and hand washing facilities in their homes.

Help us build a world where everyone has access to a safe toilet and hand washing facilities by donating to the Mampando hygiene and sanitation project.
